

The 3-Day Full Body Plan

A minimalist, full-body approach — three sessions a week, built to work hard in the time you actually have.

This plan is built around one idea: a short, focused session done properly beats a long one done half-heartedly. Three full-body sessions a week, roughly 50 minutes each, is enough to train your whole body effectively — no more time in the gym than you actually need.

The principle behind it is simple. A set only drives real progress when it's taken close to genuine effort. Train that way, and you need far fewer sets to get the job done. That's what keeps these sessions short: not less effort, just less wasted volume.

How the Sessions Work

You'll alternate between two full-body sessions, Full Body 1 and Full Body 2, across the week — aim for at least 2–3 days between sessions so you're training three times over roughly a 7–10 day spread.

Week 1: Full Body 1 → Full Body 2 → Full Body 1

Week 2: Full Body 2 → Full Body 1 → Full Body 2

Keep alternating this way so both sessions get equal attention over time.

Rest Times

BETWEEN	REST
Warm-up sets	45 seconds – 1 minute
Working sets	1 minute 45 seconds – 2 minutes

Warm-up sets are lighter-weight ramp-up sets of the same exercise — they prepare the muscle and joint for the working sets that follow, not a separate general warm-up.

FULL BODY 1

EXERCISE	WARM-UP SETS	WORKING SETS
Leg Curl (machine)	1	2
Barbell Squat	2	2
Lat Pulldown	1	2
Shoulder Press (machine)	1	2
Chest Fly	1	2
Tricep Extension	—	1

FULL BODY 2

EXERCISE	WARM-UP SETS	WORKING SETS
Barbell RDL	2	2
Chest Supported Row	1	2
Dumbbell Incline Chest Press	2	2
Lateral Raise	—	1
Incline Bicep Curl	1	2
Leg Extension	1	2

Recommendations

- Track your lifts. Write down the weight and reps for every working set. The only way to know you're progressing is to see it on paper — and small, steady increases over time are what actually drive results.
- Eat a carb-heavy meal 45–90 minutes before training. This gives you the energy to actually push your working sets close to effort, which is the whole point of the plan.
- Stretch after each session. A few static stretches, especially for the lower body, help with recovery and keep you moving well between sessions.